

I started out looking for an Henri Toulouse-Lautrec painting in one of what I think of as his iconic complementary color combinations—a warm beige and an almost greenish blue, which gives these paintings an otherworldly and aquatic quality.

I put the painting at right, La Clownesse, through Canva's palette creator tool and came up with the palette above, which I think would be both a lovely and memorable color palette for a restaurant or supper club. Then, Googling for color palettes of existing supper clubs, I happened to come across this old postcard depicting a place called Larry Potter's Supper Club in Hollywood, which has colors close to this palette (though with more red, similar to the clownesses's lipstick!).
