

The sand gradually turned from white to flecks of gold and tan as I walked closer to the shore. I stepped into the pristine and calm water. Vibrant sea life swam quickly and gracefully past my toes. The coral red of my nail polish fit in well with the popping hues of yellow, green, and blue that could be seen on the bodies and faces of the fish. I looked up to the horizon and saw shades of blue and green I had never seen before, all of which slowly faded into a thin black line that met the powder blue sky.
